Some people say we don’t have seasons in Southern California. While we do enjoy a temperate climate year-round in the Conejo, we certainly do have changes in our weather and in our landscapes. If you have hiked any of the wonderful trails in our Santa Monica Mountains, you’ll experience a whole new perspective of where we live (and why we live here). Especially in the Fall, the hills are golden and dotted with giant green oak trees. The views from our mountain peaks are spectacular and seem to go on forever. If you’re looking out from some of these vistas, you can see a far off Catalina and the Channel Islands. Just a turn of 180 degrees and the entire Conejo Valley is revealed below. It just doesn’t get much better than this.

Then, again, there is the incredible entertainment that is available to us in the Conejo. Just look through this magazine at the amazing variety of events and things to do here, further validating why we call this our home. Even with that, there is always more to discover. There are new opportunities popping up all of the time, which is why we maintain a current, online version of Conejo365. If there is an event or activity that you are planning or know about that’s not already in either our printed magazine or website, go ahead and add it yourself. YES!! You can really do this. Just go to our website at www.conejo365.com and click on the "add your event" button and give us the scoop. No event is too small or too large for our pages and it’s FREE to list your information.

As I travel throughout our communities, I hear a lot of people talking about how they like doing business locally and keeping our dollars at home. To that I say, look through this magazine. Our advertisers have invested in helping us bring all of our residents a one-stop shop for everything there is to do in the Conejo. Support the merchants in our area and take advantage of the many activities available to you and your family. If you are Interested in advertising your event or your business, contact me at mike@conejo365.com.

For those who prefer a digital version of Conejo365, we send out a weekly email on Thursdays called “Here’s what’s happening in the Conejo.” If you would like to receive these updates, go to our website and register at the bottom of the page. This version of Conejo365 is more current since it includes events that are added after the print publication.

See you on our trails, at our events and in our stores. It’s what’s happening in the Conejo.

Step inside Farmhouse Comforts and you will instantly sense the true meaning of the phrase, “farm sweet farm.” Located in the Lindero Oaks Shopping Center on Via Colinas, you are greeted by the cheery chirps of finches as you stroll through the front porch of an authentic farmhouse.

Once inside, you are enveloped with a distinct hint of southern hospitality. “When people visit the store, we want them to feel welcomed as if they are entering our home,” says John Laurenzi, an insurance agent who opened the business with his wife, Kelly, in 2014.

The couple, who have three grown children and eight grandchildren, wanted to give back to their beloved Conejo Valley by creating a unique shopping experience for its residents and visitors. “We felt that the area was lacking in creative and fun gift stores,” Kelly says of the decision to start the business. “Farmhouse Comforts offers the community beautiful gifts and unique décor in an inviting atmosphere.”

Farmhouse decorating is warm, cozy and full of charm, harkening back to simpler times. The Laurenzis characterize this style by blending new with the old items you won’t find anywhere else. “Bringing farm style into a home can be accomplished by combining the right elements and colors,” explains John, who hails from Memphis, Tennessee and spent many summers with his mom painting and rearranging furniture to create fresh new looks for the family.

Adds Kelly, “It’s really about surrounding yourself with the things you love and make you happy. You don’t have to be a fan of farm style to enjoy our store. We carry our favorite lines of scented candles, vintage flannels, custom leather handbags, crafted jewelry and home décor so any customer can find an ideal gift for their occasion.”

The couple travels to retail shows and vintage markets across the country in an effort to fill the store with unique and one-of-a-kind pieces. Inspired by her parents love for picking, Kelly’s vision has defined the identity of the store. Farmhouse Comforts is well known for its antique windmills. One such statement piece, a nine-foot windmill fitted with a rare whale’s tail and reproduction clock, was recently acquired by a customer who is building a barn for entertaining. “The minute she walked into the store, she fell in love with it,” recalls John.

“What’s exciting is that we often hear of how our store reminds people of where they are from,” says John. “It’s amazing to watch customers pause, look around and if only for a moment, travel back to days gone by.”

After three successful years in business, the Laurenzis say the experience has been more rewarding than they ever imagined. “We created an environment in which people truly feel at home,” expresses the couple. “We value the relationships with our clients.”

Farmhouse Comforts decorates in grand style for the holiday season and holds several events. “Christmas is our favorite time of year and we do it big. So, if you haven’t had the opportunity to experience it, don’t miss out. “This year will be just as fabulous,” John states. “Don’t miss out.”

“We’re excited to bring back our signature pepper jelly and butters,” Kelly exclaims. “People love them and they make great gifts!”

The couple also offers in-house consultations and procurement services for customers.

365: What makes your program unique?

Nelson: In 1972, the U.S. Department of Education recognized leadership in its definition of gifted and talented education. California also adopted this recognition. Unfortunately, our schools focus more on academics and sports. What we’re doing is focusing on organizational leadership giftedness. Currently, there are no other programs like this in the Conejo Valley or the United State.

365: How do you develop your curricula?

Nelson: I took a lot of what’s out there for adults and modified it for youth and pre-teens … We also studied classic developmental psychology research. From this, we figured out how to appropriately age-size the training.

365: Not everyone will get into the program?

Nelson: No. This will be like other programs for students who are gifted in academics, the arts or athletics. There will be an assessment and tryout of sorts. Bringing students with lower aptitudes into the program will overwhelm them and potentially decrease their confidence and self-esteem, as well as slowing the others from developing their potential.

365: How do you define a child who is “leadership gifted?”

Nelson: We’re looking for preteens and teens who possess a superior ability to learn organizational leadership skills at an accelerated pace and who demonstrate emerging leader characteristics.

365: How young can you begin to see leadership giftedness?

Nelson: Believe it or not, some children will begin to show leadership aptitude in preschool. They are often called ‘precocious’ or ‘pistols’! Even bossy students typically have leadership aptitude. They are trying to be leaders but haven’t learned the finesse of leading yet.

365: Explain the application and acceptance process?

Nelson: The initial assessment is a free, 25-question survey completed by an adult, like a parent, who’s seen the child in social settings. If a student passes this phase, we ask the parent to submit another one or two referrals from an adult outside the family, such as a teacher or a coach. Then, we will invite the applicant to a workshop to participate in fun, project-based activities where they can be observed by our trainers. If they receive high scores, they will be readily accepted.

365: How do you train a young leader?

Nelson: The curricula are broken by age and stages. It’s a combination of cognitive, moral, social and emotional development. The training is project-based. The kids participate in micro projects of 10 to 20 minutes. Each group is assigned a team leader, along with three to five peers. The group has an adult trainer or coach who utilizes a Socratic method, but won’t give explicit direction. There is a debrief following each exercise. A typical program consists of eight, 90-minute sessions per semester.

365: How will this help the students once they graduate?

Nelson: We will hand out certificates as well as write recommendations for college. These days, universities are looking beyond SAT and ACT scores. They want holistic applicants who demonstrate 21st century skills that includes leadership abilities.

365: When do you hope to launch the sessions and what is the cost?

Nelson: We are currently accepting applications and will most likely start training this coming January. Costs will vary, depending on whether a student is involved in the main community program or in school/civic group sponsored ones. A typical module will range from $200 to $400 and include training, workbook, T-shirt, personalized coaching, and materials. Yet a sponsoring organization could offer low or no-cost programs to its members.
